Orientation Programme

Traffic Awareness and Road Safety Society organized an online Orientation Programme on 17th October, 2020 for the freshers. First year students of humanities participated in the orientation programme via google meet. About 300 students joined the what's app groups and 200 students registered themselves for the membership.

The meet started with the address by the Programme Coordinator Dr. Cheena Gambhir in which she highlighted various traffic and road safety related issues especially in the times of pandemic. She also motivated the members to wear mask and maintain social distancing once they leave their house for any kind of job. The highlight of the programme was PPT presentation and interactive session in which the students shared their experiences and also learnt about the updates in traffic rules. The participants were given a brief insight into the various activities undertaken by the society and the proposed activities which shall be undertaken by the society in future. The function concluded with vote of thanks by Dr. Sumati, faculty member of the Society.

Outcome

The pandemic was experienced for the first time ever and with whatever information basically the media was relied upon. Teaching and conducting activities online and that too in big numbers was a task in itself. Hence effort was made to update the students with covid 19 related norms and at the same time road safety rules. The students participated in big numbers in various competitions on online mode, learning new ways of presentations and developing techno skills to showcase their videos and presentations on road safety measures and ways for driving safe.
